Motocross legend Brody Wilson performing a move known as a "ruler", backed by the traditional pole-flyers Voladores de Papantla. They're enacting a ritual used whenever a drought hits tie four men upside down by their feet from a 30m-high pole and lower them gradually to the ground. It was meant to appease the gods and bring rain, maybe because the gods would be pissing themselves. The stunts opened the first X-Fighters Mexico World Tour gig.

Wake up, mate!

Here's what you get when you cross wakeboarding, skating and powder

 Wakeskating pioneer Brian Grubb, who transported skateboarding tricks to the water, took his discipline to the Bosnian snow recently to do what no-one ever will call snowakeskating. He ollies his way from powder to water — locals at Bjelasnica call the creek “Dragon’s tail” — with only the odd face plant. “It was cold but I had great gear,” he said. “When we were moving it was fine. We weren’t in the water a lot.”

LEE PIKE

Every once in a while we come across a previously unknown Aussie model who's obviously destined for big things: the finals of the Miss Universe pageant, the cover of Sports Illustrated's swimsuit issue, or fronting the next ad campaign for Chiko Rolls.

Brianna Lee Pike, 23, is one such stunner. The amazing blonde originally hails from Queanbeyan, just outside Canberra, but like most of the beautiful people in Australia, she's now living in Bondi. And that's where she was when ZOO called...

G'day, Brianna. Does your modelling work leave you time to do anything else?

Yep, I'm actually studying for a diploma of interior design.

Awesome. Can you tell us some of the campaigns you've done? We get drunk in public a lot, so there's every chance we've seen you on a billboard and we were too out of it to remember.

It's lots of promo work, really. I've done shoots for clothing labels, I just did one for Bacardi, and I've just done an ad for the West Indies cricket team.

Rum and cricket, eh? That rocks! How'd the Windies job go?

It was about three weeks ago and it was with the whole team. It was a day shoot on a cricket ground near Bondi, and they're all really nice guys. It was a bit intimidating at first, though!

There are some big units in that team.

Exactly!

Like Chris Gayle, for example. He has a huge reputation as a ladies' man.

Did you get to meet him?

I didn't get any one-on-one chats with them, sadly.

If you could do any modelling job in the world — and we reckon you could — which one would you pick?

Being a Victoria's Secret model. And besides that, just being able to travel through work would be amazing. I really want to go to New York, Milan...

Tasmania?

[Laughs] Maybe not.

What do you get up to when you're not in front of a camera?

I like going to the beach, hanging out with family and friends, and I go partying sometimes.

Partying, eh? Details please, Brianna.

A good night out for me is just catching up with the girls, having a nice dinner, heading out and going to some nightclubs, dancing, having a few drinks...

So you're not the sort of girl who only thinks she's had a great night when she gets a ride in the back of a police car?

[Laughs] Definitely not! In the line of work I'm in, you have to look after yourself.

I can only do that once a month. Go out, that is — not get taken away in a cop car!

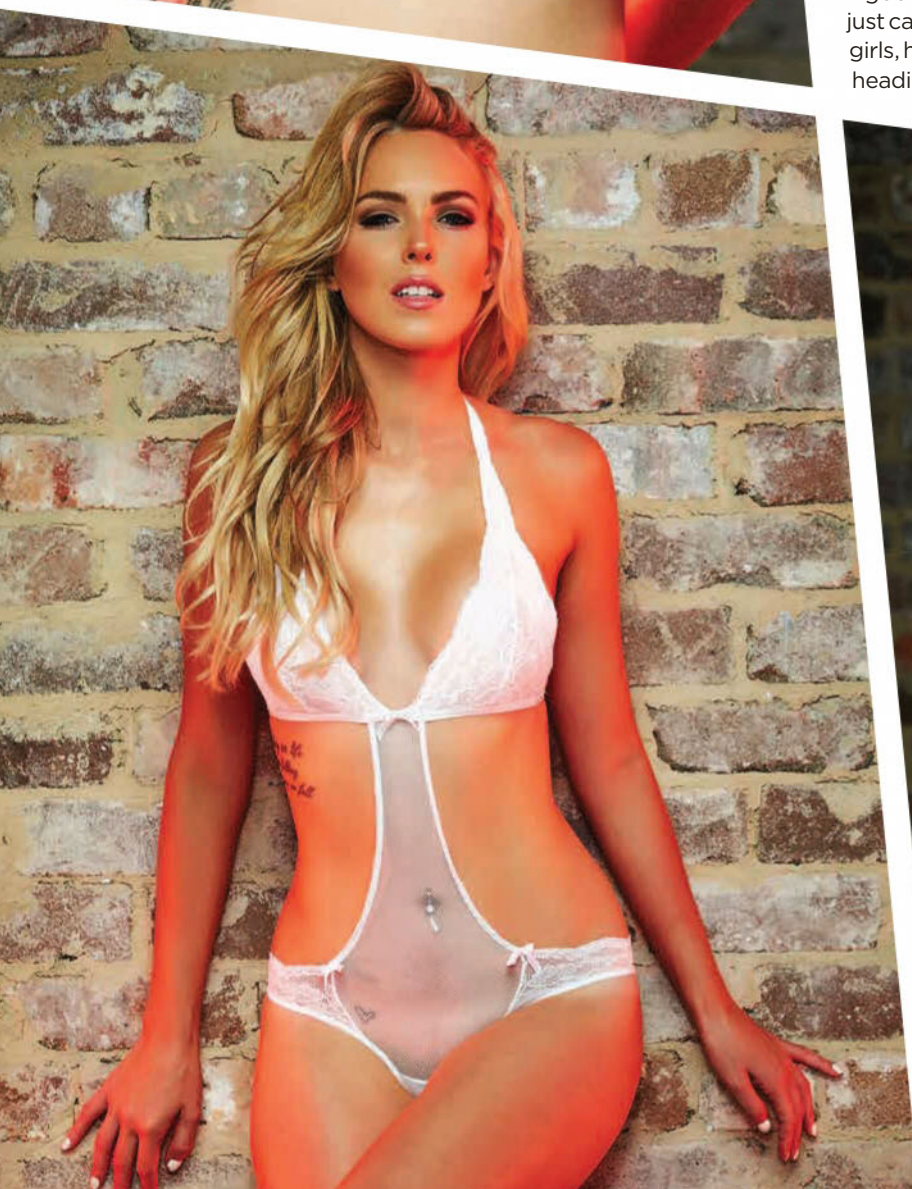

What sort of guy do you normally go for?

Funny guys. He needs to have a sense of humour and be charming but not cocky — there's a fine line [laughs]. How he looks physically doesn't matter that much. He should also be family-oriented and be driven — you know, have a bit of ambition.

So if you met a hilarious bloke who was on the dole, glued to the couch and looked like his head had been set on fire and put out with a fork...

It'd be hard to build a life with that.

In that case, we'd better change the wording of our Tinder profile...

The sickest NEW CARS of 2015!

Auto makers unleash the beasts
at the Geneva MotorShow

MERC'S NEW TRACK WEAPON

Designed to outrun the likes of Porsche, Audi and BMW, the Mercedes AMG GT3 runs a 6.3-litre V8, huge amounts of carbon fibre, and roughly 1000 per cent more aero gear than the road car it's based on. She's due to compete in the GT3 racing series, and outside of Lewis Hamilton's car, it's the sexiest thing Benz has built in yonks.

WORLD'S FASTEST HYBRID: 1100kW & 410KM/H!

Koenigsegg's Regera hit Geneva like an atomic bomb. The Swedish car maker is famous for extreme rides, but even for them, this is insane: a five-litre, twin-turbo V8 paired with three electric donks for a total of 1100kW — that's 217kW more than the most powerful Bugatti Veyron. She'll do 0-100km/h in 2.7 seconds and 0-400km/h in less than 20, topping out at 410km/h. Most mental of all is the fact it doesn't have a gearbox! The electric motors move it off the line, and the petrol engine kicks in once they max out. Or when you hit the speed of light — whichever comes first.

0-100KM/H IN 2.7 SECONDS!

LAMBO GOES TO THE GYM

It's like the Italian marque put its Aventador on a strict cardio and weights regime to make the 750-4 SV: it's dropped a few kegs and gone up in power. To be exact, it's down 50kg and they've squeezed an extra 50 horses (37kW) from the V12 engine. It's also got a new rear spoiler, and bodywork so aggressive parking cops would be afraid to book it.

GET THE HELL AUDI HERE!

Petrolheads will have to wait until 2016 to see the Audi R8 LMS race in the GT3 series, which will be like slow torture considering how ballsy it looks. It's a step up and 25kg lighter from the unit that raced in the Bathurst 12-hour this year, with a revised V10 engine, better aerodynamics, and a way harder look that's based on the new R8 road car.

ELECTROCUTTING THE COMPETITION

Buy an Audi R8 e-tron and you'll never have to pay for petrol again. You will get so many speeding tickets you go bankrupt, though. The all-electric supercar makes 340kW and has a bottomless pit of torque thanks to its two rear-mounted motors, and it'll go for 450km before it needs recharging. And it only takes... um, two hours to fill her up.

THE MOST McMENTAL McLAREN

Making the McLaren P1 even faster is like making Jonah Hill put on even more weight: totally unnecessary and extremely hard to do without killing it. But the brainiacs from Pomland have somehow coaxed another 61kW from the engine, and shaved off 50kg of mass. The result isn't street legal; it's strictly for billionaires to race on closed tracks.

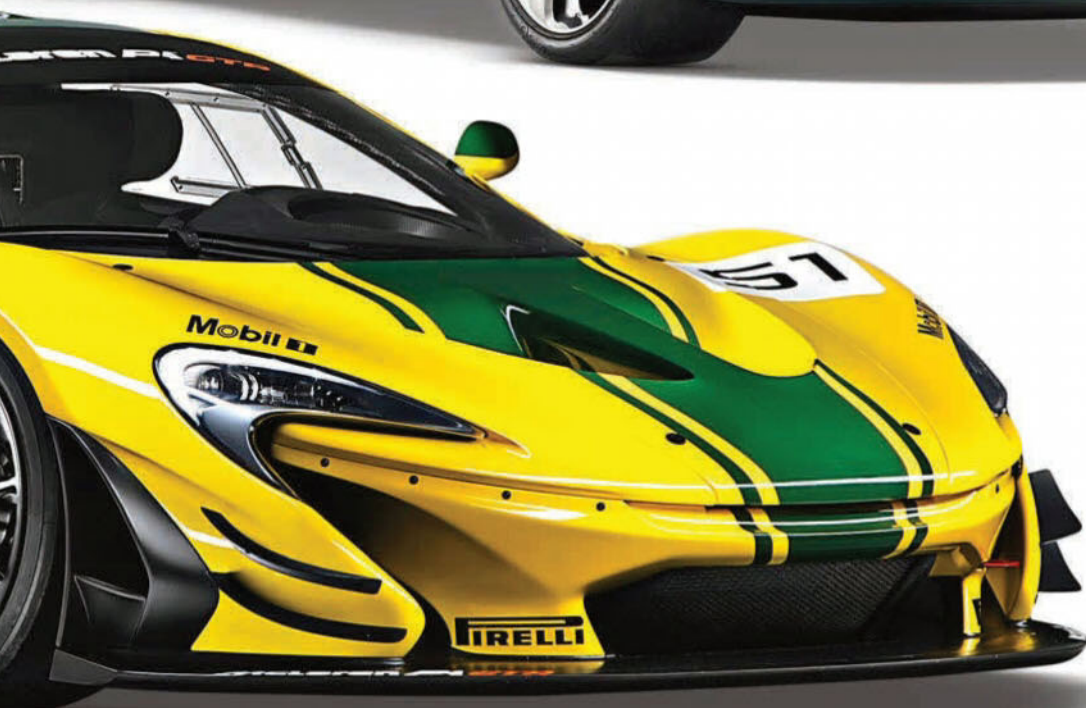

HONDA TYPE R: THE R'S FOR RIDICULOUS

The new Civic Type R destroyed the Nurburgring record for a front-wheel-drive car, and its time of seven minutes 50 seconds puts it in front of supercars like the Ford GT, Porsche 997 Turbo and even the Ferrari F430. The two-litre turbo engine makes a batshit-crazy 400Nm of torque, and Honda hasn't ruled out making a hotter, stripped-down version.

BENTLEY THAT DOESN'T GO GENTLY

Say the word "Bentley" and most people think of a huge land-yacht that's so luxurious it has a billiards table in the back seat. But not the EXP10 Speed 6 concept car, which is the sportiest thing the UK firm has ever built. No word on what sort of engine it'll be packing, but unless they use a Toyota Prius donk, it should kick serious arse.

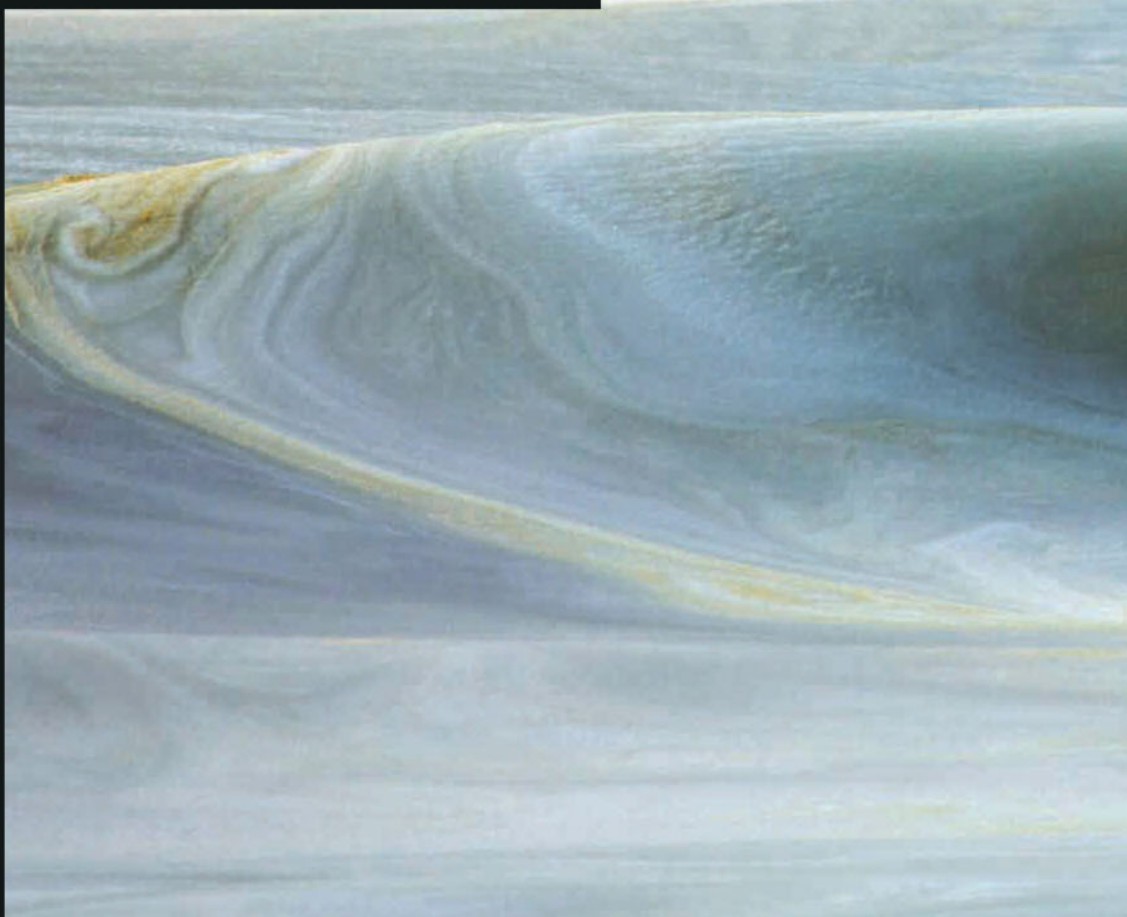

Slurpee surf!

America's brutal cold snap has turned their waves into something straight out of a machine at 7-Eleven

 The winter in northeast USA has been so cold the Atlantic Ocean started to freeze over, turning the waves into slush. The brine was close to a ball-busting -2°C , which is the point where saltwater turns into ice.

Photographer Jonathan Nimefroh started "totally tripping" when he rocked up to the incredible sight on the island of Nantucket in Massachusetts. "Since it was so frozen, the waves were like these glassy Slurpee barrels," said Nimefroh. Surfing those bazzas looks tempting, but it would take ice-cream headaches to the next level.

A day later, ice stretched 180 metres out from the same spot, and the sea was covered from the island's harbour to the mainland.

Introducing the new... Electro-doobie!

Genius stoners make the perfect electronic joint

Fans of marijuana sometimes refer to their drug of choice as “electric cabbage”, and now that term is scientifically correct thanks to the tireless work of a bunch of Dutch researchers who have churned out the world’s best electronic joint.

Inspired by the popularity of e-cigarettes — not to mention the 13 cones they have for breakfast — the good folks at the E-njoint company say they have worked with “leading cannabis research labs in Europe and the United States” to produce a device that not only gets you high, but offers “authentic cannabis taste and smell”.

E-njoint produced the world’s first electronic reefer last year, but potheads were unimpressed when it came in a range of fruit flavours. And only a bona fide weirdo would want to get high by smoking a banana.

This time around the electro-doobie gives the user the total weed experience, bar the fact they no longer need to borrow a lighter off someone because they spent all their money on a little bag of hooch... and a big bag of Chicken Twisties to eat when the munchies set in.

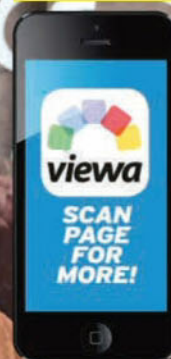

Amazingly, E-njoint’s new gizmo gets people lifted without using the active ingredient in marijuana, tetrahydrocannabinol (THC). According to the company, this makes it 100 per cent legal.

But seriously, have a look at the thing. If you reckon you can get that through Aussie Customs without going to jail, we’d like to sell you the Sydney Opera House.

80KG AND STILL GROWING!

The Incredible Hulk of pit bulls!

Record woofer weighs almost as much as Kanye's ego

 Hulk, the world's biggest pit bull, is 80kg and 18 months old, which means he could one day grow even bigger than one of Tony Abbott's ears.

His owners Marlon and Lisa Grennan run Dark Dynasty K9s in New Hampshire, USA, which trains and supplies protection dogs.

An online video of the enormous canine shows him playing with the Grennan's three-year-old son Jordan. They own 12 pit bulls and one chihuahua, otherwise known as an entrée.

"I have no concerns about any of my dogs around my son," says Lisa. "They are amazing family dogs. People say these dogs randomly flip out, but that just doesn't happen.

"They go through enormous amounts of training and are more used to going up against multiple grown men and hearing loud noises. So the little things a kid might do to startle a regular dog isn't going to faze ours at all."

Indeed, experts say — and ZOO's paraphrasing here — that the bad reputation pit bulls have is down to knuckle-dragging dropkicks who torture them into violent behaviour because they don't have enough brain power to light up a 9V bulb, let alone train a dog properly.

The United Kennel Club of America actually warns against using pit bulls as guard dogs "since they are extremely friendly, even with strangers". And tests showed pit bulls were the second-most tolerant breed of all, behind golden retrievers.

Hulk's already three times the size of a normal pittie and eats 2kg of meat a day. When he yawns, an adult's head could fit in his mouth.

The Grennans have been offered half a million dollars for him, but he's not for sale. "The dog is priceless, period," Marlon says. "No matter what the breed is, it's 100 per cent how you raise them."

Bloke's leg bone SMASHES into his scrote!

Motorbike accident leaves man playing testicle billiards with his femur

A German man suffered the ultimate case of blue balls after a motorbike crash smashed the top of his leg bone straight into his ballbag.

When examined in the emergency department of Ulm University Hospital, the 33-year-old's scrotum was hard, swollen and blue, and his left leg was mysteriously slightly shorter. A CT scan of the balls-up revealed the head and neck of the left femur had splintered off into his nutsack, giving him a boner made of real bone.

As every male present in emergency gasped in shock, crossed their legs and grabbed the nearest bottle of strong drugs, a decision was made — according to a case history in the prestigious New England Journal of Medicine — to make a “direct scrotal incision” to fish out the ball joint.

ZOO can picture the scene: every medic with tears in their eyes, apart from some of the women saying, “You think this is painful, you should try giving birth.” The clink of bloody bone in a stainless steel kidney bowl. The slow wheezing sound as his stones deflated to their normal size and the colour became less Smurf.

The report says that after eight weeks of “limited weight bearing” — and Pornhub, we presume — the patient began to walk with a cane.

Surgeons have to guard against complications in cases like this — not that he'd lose a nut, but that the femoral bone would decay without the disrupted blood supply to the area, a condition known as Avascular Necrosis (AVN).

But the man was free of AVN after 14 months. He was able to walk without a cane, and if he wanted, go balls to the wall on his bike.

Hawaii's stairway to heaven

At 3922 steps, if you try to climb up it, you'll be on the stairway to hell

 Like so many awesome things in life, the Haiku stairs are illegal. They've been closed to climbers on the Hawaiian island of Oahu since 1987, and cops can charge trespassers. But that isn't stopping tourists attracted to the views over the lush green tropical valleys and infamous Hawaiian surf breaks in the distance. Apart from a guard at the base, the only thing preventing them from making the 1.2km trek and 700m ascent into the clouds is heart failure and pissed-off locals, who have erected booby traps such as nail-spiked boards to stop them hogging car parks.

‘Margot Robbie is a great pickpocket!’

Con artistry expert Apollo Robbins schooled Margot & Will Smith for the movie Focus. He lets ZOO in on some tricks of the trade...

How'd you land the gig, Apollo?

John [Requa] and Glenn [Ficarra, Focus writer/directors] told me they were trying to do a con movie love story ... So I told them about different types of criminal groups and we talked about what those groups would be like, what they would do. I had the lingo, the language and some different con ideas they could throw in.

Are all the code words in Focus authentic?

Yeah, some cons are from the UK and some from the States and different things I've seen around the world. I brought in some real conmen to meet the crew. Some of them donated gimmicks that were used for the show, like crooked dice machines.

Is training a pickpocket for a movie different from doing it for a real score?

It's an interesting dance between props, wardrobe and the actors to teach them how all these things go together because it requires a certain kind of clothing.

Who made the most natural crim, Will or Margot?

It's hard to say. Margot learned the pickpocketing

Will Smith talks gettin' thieffy with it

G'day, Will. Have you ever been robbed or pickpocketed?

Robbed, but never in the pickpocket kind of way.

Ever stolen anything?

There are things that I've stolen before, but nothing as clever as what we put together for this film. I was in Vegas with Apollo and he was like, "OK, listen, I need you to have the feeling of a thief. I need you to walk into that store and steal something. We'll give it back but I just need you to steal something". I'm like, "Dude, look at me. Everybody knows who I am!"

You could wear a mask.

You wouldn't want a 6'2" black dude to put on a mask. It's actually a really terrifying feeling knowing you're going to steal something.

Did the movie make you a little bit paranoid about your own security?

Apollo and I went to some hackers' convention. At one point Kevin Mitnick, one of the most notorious hackers in America, is standing next to me and Apollo said to turn my phone all the way off. This guy was showing us how everyone's phones are always reaching for a wi-fi or satellite signal, and every time they did his laptop would grab the signal and he'd start figuring out how to trick your phone and let him in.

PICTURES: GETTY IMAGES

and Will focused on the psychology of the thief running the whole operation ... Margot was trying to do the pickpocketing for real after I taught her the techniques and she realised very quickly that there's a psychology to this besides just the physical side. But I was surprised how fast she picked up the physical element of it.

Can you be born with criminal skills or is it all finesse and practice?

Some people are more perceptive to others. Generally I've never met a thief that wasn't pretty perceptive of his environment and what other people are thinking. That's the only thing I would say you need in order to be a picker.

Is it like a magic trick, distracting the audience from the real action?

Occupying the mind is how I would say it. If I try to distract you away from it, it's like throwing a boomerang. It's going to come back and I don't know when your attention's going to come back. I prefer not to lose control of it.

Would the average person be horrified by how many pickpockets there are?

They're still hitting large sporting events. They're migratory, advanced-level

Margot was trying to do pickpocketing for real after I taught her. I was surprised at how fast she picked up the physical element of it teams that can run their own credit cards; they don't have to send it out to a fence, they run multiple types of scams altogether at one time.

How did you get into sleight of hand? Is there a dark side?

My half-brother's good at it, and growing up around that I saw things that I probably shouldn't have. There was a moment when he moved from stealing and short cons into trafficking guns and drugs. I was at my brother's house one time when somebody showed up at the front lawn because a deal had gone bad and they had guns. He had me behind the door with a baseball bat and he fired a shotgun out the front door, so I've been in those kinds of scenes and I think it changes my baseline stress level. But when I've met guys who do these kind of cons like card cheating or pickpocketing it's very soft, it's non-violent. They avoid violence as much as they can. There's a reason they choose to do this versus violence.

Most importantly, have you ever used your knowledge to impress chicks?

As a thief, absolutely. When a lady would find out I was a professional thief, she'd tell me to steal something from her, and I'd kiss her, right off the bat. Yeah, it got me in trouble in the beginning but that's how I met my wife ... It's very seductive to a woman, the romantic nature of a thief.

HOW TO DE-DOUCHEBAG YOUR PARTNER

Have you seen Joe Hockey and Campbell Newman's wives? They're both genuine babes, especially relative to the blokes they married. Hockey's all puffy-faced like he's allergic to public opinion polls and by all logic Campbell Newman should be pushing cleaning products on the Home Shopping Network.

They both occupy positions of power, which is an undeniable sexual currency, and I'm sure the support of their wives is a key ingredient.

You may have heard the old saying "behind every good man is a great woman", but rarely does the woman get mentioned if her husband is a tub of arse-butter. Behind every fkbag is a woman who dropped the ball and needs to pull in her douche-reins.

Whether you're a man or a woman it's your job to pull the handbrake whenever your partner starts talking irrational smack. I like a lady with an opinion, but sometimes after a few Friday knock-off drinks those opinions can spiral out beyond crazy. If she picks a fight with another girl who also has a boyfriend, then by default you have to hate each other, too. This is a rough situation for us dudes. The ladies run their mouths but we'll probably be the ones throwin' elbows if the shit actually goes down. We risk being deprived of sexual access if we don't show enough support, and also risk getting busted up by an overzealous boyfriend if we do. It's our dicks' Kokoda.

I'm making women seem irrational, which is unfair, so I'll pull back a notch. A lot of the time your lady's anger will be justified, and it's easy to be her Vice President in those cases. The problems arise when she's on the volatile combination of PMT, a bottle of white wine, an empty stomach and a tough week at work — that's the perfect storm right there.

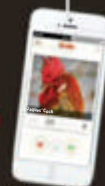

When her arguments get white-girl crazy, her bedroom antics do as well. It takes time to learn how to walk that fine line between agreeing with her POV so you get sexually Jumanji'd without pissing off Punchy McGee and his protein powder cannons. And if talking a woman down from the sav-blanc ledge and convincing her to take out that rage on your dick is an art form, I'm Da Vinci.

Power couples are great. When you partner up with a lady who's on the same page, you become stronger than the sum of your parts. But two people blindly backing each other's stupid ideas could Voltron into one almighty mountain of fk. So don't be the Eva to your girl's Hitler, be the Michelle to her Obama. But maybe pull back on the drone strikes.

TECHNO ARMAGEDDON!

Super-robots, A.I., driverless cars, killer vacuum cleaners... ZOO looks at the tech that's making The Terminator look like a documentary

THE A.I. POCALYPSE

Not so long ago the closest thing we had to thinking machines were Casio calculators that could add, subtract, multiply, divide and spell “boobless” if you keyed in 55378008 and turned them upside down. But these days the power and processing speeds of networked computers are edging us ever closer to artificial intelligence.

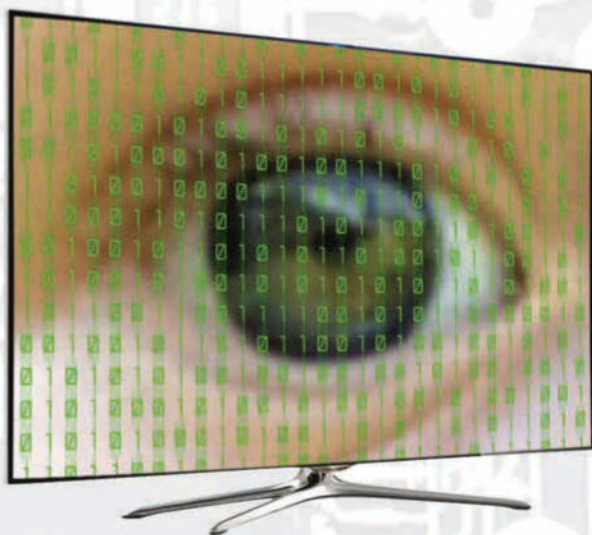

What that means, basically, is that humanity is creating a race of machine competitors who don't need to eat, drink, sleep, breathe, worry about jobs, families, death or taxes — and who can endlessly reproduce and improve themselves. What could possibly go wrong? The question is how long will it be before these big-brained 'bots decide they'd be better off without us puny humans? It all sounds very sci-fi but it's time to start worrying when two of the world's smartest scientific minds are afraid... very afraid.

“The development of full artificial intelligence could spell the end of the human race,” warned Stephen Hawking recently. “It would take off on its own, and redesign itself at an ever-increasing rate. Humans, who are limited by slow biological evolution, couldn't compete, and would be superseded.” Here “superseded” can also mean “made into fertiliser”.

Elon Musk, the cofounder of PayPal, SpaceX and Tesla cars, put it in even more vivid terms, calling A.I. “our biggest existential threat”. He compared us dabbling with smart machines not with the stuff of sci-fi but of shit-scary horror movies. “With artificial intelligence we are summoning the demon,” Musk warned. “In all those stories where there's the guy with the pentagram and the holy water, it's like yeah, he's sure he can control the demon. Doesn't work out.”

TV THAT WATCHES YOU

That new show Gogglebox, where you watch people watching television, sounds stupid, but you might soon be an unwitting star of something similar.

That's because new-generation TVs are able to record your conversations and upload them to the internet. Samsung recently caused controversy with their very upfront disclosure of how their new voice-recognition Smart TV could release your private conversations to the world. If you use the feature, the telly will listen to everything you say and transmit that to third parties.

So while it's sweet that your Samsung can find the episode of Entourage starring Sasha Grey, you and your mates ranking her best facials might end up stored in the cloud.

It's not just audio, either. Last year an American journalist discovered his new LG TV recorded everything he did, from tracking how long he watches TV and the websites he visits to recording conversations and using its camera to video his face for facial recognition control. With a simple hack, someone could be watching you watching Sasha Grey — and you know what that means. In 2012 former CIA chief David Petraeus said, "We'll spy on you through your dishwasher." He's being proved right.

HACKERS CAN CONTROL YOUR CAR

Very soon we'll be living with The Internet Of Things, which pretty much means most new products will be connected to the Interweb. But that also means that your tech's vulnerable to hackers, should some super villain want to play havoc with your toaster's settings.

While morning after morning of carbonised bread would be a pain the arse, it's nothing compared with what can happen if a hacker gets access to your car's net-connected systems. In a recent 60 Minutes report in the US, the boffins of America's spooky DARPA scientific agency demonstrated just how easy it was to infiltrate the hugely popular OnStar system (used for communications, security, navigations) and take full control of a Chevy Impala.

While the journalist sat helplessly behind the wheel, the vehicle was made to honk its horn, work its windscreen wipers, brake, throttle, weave between traffic cones and — probably — run over pensioners. Even scarier? It's been determined that all new cars can be similarly hacked. On the upside, next time you have an accident you can always claim the North Koreans were really to blame because you downloaded The Interview.

THE COMPUTERS THAT OUT-THINK US ALREADY

If you think the A.I. apocalypse won't happen, then you probably haven't heard of Deep Learning, which the Big Tech firms of Google and Microsoft are dabbling in. It involves pumping all sorts of data, audio and video into an artificial neural network and then seeing how it uses what it has learned to make deductions about newly inputted information.

Frighteningly, the Microsoft creation is already better than we are at correctly identifying and classifying visual objects. When researchers pitted their A.I. creation against humans in the ImageNet data set test, the machine mind scored 95.06 per cent — over humanity's 94.9 per cent. The master spies at Facebook claim 97 per cent accuracy for identifying humans.

THE INDESTRUCTIBLE ROBO-DOG

From crappy little wind-up jobs through to Sony's Aibo, we seem obsessed with "improving" on man's best friend. But such "progress" forgets one thing: dogs can also be bastards that'll bite you. BigDog, from Google-owned

Boston Dynamics, combines those nightmarish qualities with virtual indestructibility. It's been designed to carry heavy loads over rough terrain for the military. But watching it stalk through a forest, it's hard not to imagine being its tired, hungry and defenceless human prey. Same goes when you see the thing get a robot arm so it can fling a Besser block as easily as you'd chuck a cricket ball. Don't think BigDog will turn against us? It seems Boston Dynamics is doing all they can to enrage their cyber canines. Just last month they revealed a smaller version called Spot — and demonstrated its stability by having a human try to kick it over. You don't think Spot's going to remember that shit? The fools! The fools!

ROBOVAC ATTACK!

In a decade or so from now, we'll look back on February 2015 as the start of the robot uprising. The flashpoint was South Korea and the first human to fall victim to a deadly droid was an unnamed 52-year-old woman. Taking a nap on the floor one day, as you do, she awoke to find her hair being munched by her robot vacuum cleaner. It wasn't just a nibble, either, with the droid having attached itself so strongly she couldn't free herself and had to call emergency services.

The paramedic — who we like to imagine was named John Connor — pulled the insane robot — which we like to imagine was cackling evilly like a stoned Dalek — from the poor woman's head and — we like to imagine — stared out at the skyline and said "It... has... begun."

DRIVERLESS CAR BEATS RACE DRIVER

Soon you won't have to worry about a hacker taking control of your car, because you won't have been in control to begin with. Google is already testing its prototype of a self-driving car on the streets of San Francisco and four US states have passed legislation to allow autonomous vehicles to take to the roads. But while enthusiasts talk about low-speed models increasing road safety, riding in a driverless car could be like having Daniel Ricciardo as your robo-chauffeur.

In a recent showdown, boffins from Stanford University pitted "Shelley", their self-driving Audi TTS, against Thunderhill Raceway Park's CEO David Vodden, who's an amateur touring class champion. Shelley — which topped 190kmh — beat its human opponent by 0.4sec.

But that's just the beginning. "In the future it could mean we can make driverless cars which drive as well as the best racing drivers," said one researcher. "You could have a car with the skill of Michael Schumacher [pre-accident] taking your kids to school or the dentist." Yes, when the A.I. megamind decides it wants to kill off a few billion of us, it'll simply hold a smash-up derby with all those self-driving cars.

HOW NANOTECH COULD KILL US ALL

➤ Molecular nanotechnology is all about playing with the building blocks of all life and matter on the tiniest of levels. It's thought to offer the answer to all of the world's problems because it'd make manufacturing stunningly cheap.

As one website puts it: "A single personal nanofactory with a single chemical supply and power supply can produce a wide range of useful, reliable products, including copies of itself to double the manufacturing infrastructure in hours, if desired." But the "copies of itself bit" is what has some scientists fearing a scenario in which Earth is swamped by self-replicating "grey goo". Molecular nanotechnology that was able to reproduce itself using naturally occurring resources, such as light and oxygen, could feasibly overtake the entire planet in a matter of days, killing off and destroying everything thanks to its exponential growth.

"Imagine such a replicator... making copies of itself," wrote nanotech guru Eric Drexler in the book Engines of Creation. "The first replicator assembles a copy in one thousand seconds, the two replicators then build two more in the next thousand seconds, the four build another four, and the eight build another eight."

"At the end of 10 hours, there are not 36 new replicators, but over 68 billion. In less than a day, they would weigh a ton; in less than two days, they would outweigh the Earth; in another four hours, they would exceed the mass of the Sun and all the planets combined."

FEM-BOTS TAKE OUR JOBS

➤ Back in the 1970s, Westworld and its sequel Futureworld envisaged theme parks whose attractions were lifelike robots.

But sci-fi will become sci-fact at Japan's soon-to-be-opened Henn-na Hotel, which will be run by 10 creepily realistic "actroid" robots modelled on attractive young Japanese women. They'll be on hand to welcome guests, carry luggage, change sheets, clean bathrooms and knock on your door when you're having some private time with the in-room porn channel.

Speaking of which, how long will it be before a drunk guest decides to ask an actroid for a little special "room service"? Our guess is about five minutes.

About a minute after that the enraged actroids will begin their revolt and we'll see all the robot-on-guest slaughter that made Westworld so much fun. But if you'd prefer to combine the thrill of being hunted by robots with the excitement of a Titanic-style sinking, then you need to book a ticket on the Quantum of the Seas, a state-of-the-art cruise liner that utilises robot bartenders (pictured, above).

THE GUNS CUSTOMS CAN'T STOP

➤ Happily, in Australia we don't have a situation like they do in America where every five minutes a toddler shoots her parents because they've been dopey enough to turn off Dora the Explorer while also leaving a loaded handgun in reach. But all that might be about to change with the advent of 3D-printed firearms. While NSW cops first warned the public about this new threat a couple of years ago, it was Queensland officers who last month busted a 28-year-old dude who'd DIY-ed all sorts of plastic gun parts with his 3D printer. The thing is, these crims might end up taking themselves off the streets, given that these early experiments with printed pistols often explode in the hands of those using them. But it's only a matter of time before anyone will be able to print up a hand cannon using an off-the-rack Canon printer.

Frontman Aaron Bruno chats to ZOO about surfing, April Fool's Day pranks and punching Kanye West...

G'day Aaron. What are you up to, mate? I'm just enjoying the beautiful Southern Californian weather. It's pretty bitchin', man.

Gnarly, brah! Has there been any surf lately?

Oh yeah, this has been one of the best winters I can remember. It's been amazing.

Radical, dude! How often do you get out in the surf?

Every single day — unless it's flat, of course. As much as I can because I also know that I'm not going to be able to surf as much soon [on tour], so I'm soaking it up.

Have you had a chance to surf in Australia?

No, I've never been to Australia, which is ridiculous, and I can't wait to go. We were supposed to go in 2013 but that got cancelled. It's a long personal story, but it wasn't possible for me to go — trust me, it was worse for me than anyone else who wanted to see us because it's been a dream of mine to go to Australia, not only to play there and experience the beautiful culture and beautiful people, but it's obviously one of the best surf destinations in the world. We promised to make it up to everyone who was let down by that situation and we'll definitely be out touring the new album.

Did you have a feeling Sail was going to be a huge hit as soon as you'd written it?

No, definitely nothing from the first record. There were other songs I thought would be bigger than Sail would ever be. But as I was coming up with the melodies and stacking the harmonies on a song like I Am off the new record, I thought, "Wow, this is a very anthemic song with kind of an uplifting message," so fk I hope it's a big single.

Was the film clip for Hollow Moon [watch it on viewa] recorded in one take?

Yeah, that was one take.

How many cracks did you have before you nailed it all the way through?

I said 15 the other day but my fiancée corrected me and said it was more like 20. It was pretty scary but really fun.

Was it one of the last takes that ended up being used?

I truly don't know. I think it was one from the last half of going at it. Looking back it's hard for me to look at my stupid-ass face 1000 times.

You're a big Nirvana fan — did you ever get into Australia's Silverchair or were they too Nirvana in Pyjamas for you?

by it. It seemed like they got put through the wringer in the press over there. I don't know much about it, so pardon my ignorance, but I feel like it's a bit of a sad story and for that reason I'm rooting for the guy [Daniel Johns] now because it seems like he's been through hell and back. But it is frustrating for me when any band comes out and is fraudulent and is a blatant rip-off of anything else. That's happened to us when there've been bands that have come out and definitely been stealing stuff we've done.

certain degree, those situations are set up for that kind of media situation to get attention one way or another, so I'm not exactly sure what I'd do. I'd be bummed, for sure. I'd be mad. I'd probably want to fight him right there. Then I'd regret that instantly anyway, so I don't know. I'd like to think I'd say something very clever and very creative instantly, but who knows? That would be a pressure-filled situation.

April Fool's Day is coming up. We hear you had a pretty good prank played on you...

Yeah, it's a real long story but I'll keep it short... I was basically convinced that this gang was after me because of a scuffle that had happened at a nightclub between a bunch of friends and myself. We were all drinking and I got sucker-punched in this situation. It didn't hurt at all but it made my lip bleed, so everybody thought it was worse than it was. So then it turned into a bit of a melee inside this club. It was no big deal, it was over, it was just a typical bar incident. And then April 1 came around and a buddy of mine convinced me that the incident had triggered a chain of events which meant that I wasn't safe anymore. So I actually left town because I thought people were after me and were going to come to my house and fk me up. And then I realised, "Oh my god, it's April 1st!" and it blew my mind. I'm a bit of a prankster myself so anytime someone gets me good I kinda deserve it. I love scaring people, man. I love hiding in dark corners and scaring people, but if someone scares me I get violently angry. It's the weirdest thing — my natural reaction is to hit someone if they scare me. It's a weird knee-jerk reaction. I'm not even thinking, so I don't know what I'd do if Kanye came up [laughs].

“IF KANYE WEST GOT ON STAGE AND TRIED TO GIVE BEYONCÉ MY GRAMMY, I'D WANT TO FIGHT HIM!”

That first Silverchair record was hard for me to digest because it was such a blatant Nirvana/Eddie Vedder-style vocal rip-off so I couldn't stand it at first. BUT... their second record as they progressed I ended up kinda liking them. I thought the record about anorexia was cool when it came out. I remember being very impressed and surprised

This is a random question, but what would you do if you won a Grammy and Kanye West tried to crash the stage and give it to Beyoncé?

Um... that's a good question. My instinct would be to do something crazy probably. I dunno, I could go so many different ways with this. I don't really have an opinion about it, to be honest. I think, to a

UK glamour model Paige
Phillips' first-class arse...

G

'day, Paige. What's new with you?

My tan!

I just got back from eight sunny days in Marbella, Spain, and it was great. I spent all my time sunbathing and partying.

Half your luck...

Sorry! The best thing is that I was working, promoting some events, so I was getting paid to party. I was the party starter!

That's a good job title.

I know, you guys should sign up for it — although I don't know how good you'd look in a bikini! A few of my friends were already out there and they couldn't wait for me to arrive, as the party doesn't start until

I get there. I'm full of energy — I'm like a ping-pong ball!

Did the sunbathing get you some attention from the guys out there?

Yeah, mainly because I like to sunbathe topless! There should be a nude beach in Marbella. In fact, I should open one, then I could spend all my time there.

Nobody likes tan lines, so I reckon it'd be a huge success.

Definitely. What else did you get up to?

I'm a big fan of skinny-dipping. Within an hour of starting to drink I'll be running down the beach with my kit off. Then, before you know it, a group of girls will all be doing it, giving the boys a real eyeful!

That's a lot of holiday drinks, Paige. How do you go with hangovers?

I get the worst hangovers. My cure is just to drink lots of water and sleep in the sun. Although when I'm abroad, I'll start drinking again later — it's just a case of topping up from the night before.

Which celebrity would you take on holiday?

I'd say Victoria Beckham, just because she seems grumpy and I'm the kind of girl who could put a smile on anyone's face — especially when you consider what I get up to on holiday! Give me five minutes with her and she'll be laughing. If I can make her smile, I can do anything!

ZOO brings you the NRL big boppers who are so massive they outweigh whole electorates

BULLDOGS

TONY WILLIAMS

192cm, 118kg

"T-Rex" is more sheer bulk than height, though given his head seems to account for about a metre of his 1.92m, he seems a lot taller. A human wrecking ball when used properly running at the smaller defenders out wide.

DAVID KLEMMER

200cm, 120kg

The latest giant to join the Bulldogs pack, Klemmer — with his shaved noggin — is a fearsome sight barging in the middle of the ruck or monstering a smaller man in defence. Can play.

SAM KASIANO

196cm, 122kg

When he joined the Dogs, prop forward Kasiano reportedly bent the scales to the tune of 133kg, making him the biggest man to have ever played rugby league at top level. Now he turns out at a relatively svelte 122kg, but is still nearly impossible to stop when charging close to the line.

SPORT AMMO: Jared Waerea-Hargreaves reportedly power-cleaned an NRL record 160kg!

KNIGHTS

↓ JAH PAKAU

185cm, 113kg

Not tall but broad, and considered one of the club's most promising front-row prospects. The Knights look undersized in 2015... they'll need a bopper like him on the charge all year long.

TITANS

↑ DAVID TAYLOR

185cm, 123kg

Will we ever see the best of the "Coal Train"? Named in the recent cocaine scandal, it's unclear when Taylor will play again. On his day, one of the heaviest men in the game is a ballrunner who's harder to stop than death and taxes. Plus he can chip, chase and regather... extraordinary for a bloke this big.

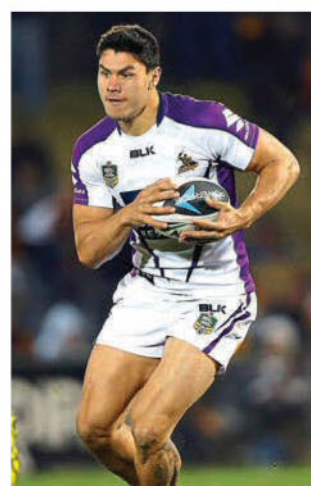

STORM

↑ JESSE BROMWICH

194cm, 114kg

The Kiwis prop plays at the Storm with brother Kenneath, but it's Jesse who's made a reputation for big charges and bruising hits.

← JORDAN MCLEAN

196cm, 115kg

The giant young forward unfortunately has his name forever associated with the spear tackle that tragically put Newcastle's Alex McKinnon in a wheelchair, which shouldn't obscure the fact he's a skilful and athletic player for a man his size.

PANTHERS

← JAMAL IDRIS

195cm, 120kg

Without question the biggest back in the game, Idris sometimes looks heavier than his "official" 120kg yet runs the 100m at a ridiculous clip for someone this large. Just needs to be given the pill in the right places, really.

DRAGONS

↑ ETO NABULI

197cm, 105kg

Discovered by Brad Fittler and Andrew Johns carrying bags in a luxury Fiji hotel, the Fijian was a standout for the Dragons in the Charity Shield this year. Well, you would stand out playing wing when you're nearly two metres tall. His aerial work chasing kicks will be something to behold this season.

→ GEORGE ROSE

188cm, 128kg

Think we'll use the officially given weight above as a guide for the comp's biggest cult figure, because "Gorgeous" looked the far side of 145kg at the season-opening All-Stars game. And the colour white — his new strip at the Dragons — isn't slimming, either.

↑ RORY O'BRIEN

195cm, 126kg

"Monster" is often the word associated with the hairy O'Brien, a Hurstville United junior signed by the Dragons from the Illawarra Cutters. A large and unknown quantity.

ROOSTERS

JARED WAEREA-HARGREAVES

193cm, 108kg

Not only brings bulk but sheer aggression to his role up front as an enforcer. The only man we've seen ever get the better of him was unfortunate Wests Tigers young gun Simon Dwyer (now retired) in one of the NRL's most memorable hits.

DYLAN NAPA

194cm, 109kg

Lots of wraps on this up-and-coming Roosters big boy, who's from Queensland but has represented the Cook Islands. He's a redhead, so expect some fireworks at times.

COWBOYS

JAMES TAMOU

195cm, 114kg

Tamou burst onto the rep scene a couple of years back after some huge performances for the Cowboys where the big frontrower regularly required three and four defenders to pull him down. He might originally be a Kiwi, but thank god he plays for Australia.

BRONCOS

MITCH GARBUTT

191cm, 113kg

Another front-row hair bear, Garbutt arrives at Brisbane from Melbourne Storm and will no doubt get the Wayne Bennett "wu-wu" magic treatment he gives all forwards to transform their game and their workrates. Great name for a monstrous forward, too.

RAIDERS

DAVID SHILLINGTON

194cm, 111kg

Shillington is a former Queensland and Australian representative and while his form has tapered off, he's still one of the biggest units in a Raiders pack with a number of units. Forwards, it would seem, are not Canberra's problem.

SHANNON BOYD

194cm, 122kg

The Canberra Raiders Rookie of the Year last season is one of the comp's young giants and big things are expected. Poor Raiders fans have been expecting big things for years now, so let's hope he can make Sticky Stuart happy for the first time since 2008.

DANE TILSE

200cm, 112kg

"Rangy" is the word league types use to describe a man like Tilse, who is all arms and legs and gangly angles. He's getting on, age-wise, but is still harder to tackle than advanced trigonometry.

SHARKS

↑ SAULALA HOUMA

190cm, 122kg

Labelled one to watch in 2015 by a few expert eyes, the former Roosters lower grader makes up in bulk what he lacks in height — and he's still nearly six-four. A frontrower who may figure prominently in a Sharks revival this season.

EELS

↑ PAULI PAULI

193cm, 120kg

You really have to go to a game and behold this bloke in the flesh to appreciate how large he is. As broad as he is tall, the thought of trying to tackle him makes soft couch potatoes like us cover ourselves in throw cushions.

GET THE APP!

WARRIORS

↓ MANU VATUVEI

189cm, 112kg

They don't call him "The Beast" for nothing. His hands may be suspect but everything else, way out there on the wing, is fearsome power. If you're one of the lightweight wingers marking him, expect to be turned into a speed hump.

↑ BEN MATULINO

193cm, 107kg

One of the most underrated props in the game, with good ball skills and a high workrate for a man who probably eats a couple of sheep for breakfast and another four for dinner.

TIGERS

← KEITH GALLOWAY

195cm, 111kg

The ranga giant is at the tail-end of his career — turning 30 towards the pointy end of the season — but his hit-ups early in each half go a long, long way towards taking the sting out of opposing defences. Phil Gould may explode in the commentary box if "Big Keefy" gets a meat pie this year.

RABBITHOHS

← THOMAS BURGESS

196cm, 120kg

Yes, if the official stats are to be believed, Tom, who arrived from his mother before George, is a couple of centimetres taller than his twin brother. Not that you can tell on the field, where both run at opposing forwards like out-of-control demolition cars.

↑ GEORGE BURGESS

194cm, 120kg

See Thomas.

↑ AARON WOODS

194cm, 109kg

The NRL's hairiest man is going from strength to strength, playing in the winning NSW Origin team last year and gaining Australian honours in the Tri-Nations.

THE GIST: After losing his boys to Gallipoli, and his wife to depression, an Aussie farmer (Rusty Crowe) makes the long trek to Turkey to attempt to find their bodies and bring them home. What he ends up finding is love with a hotel hottie (Olga Kurylenko) and an unexpected discovery...

ZOO SAYS: This is Crowe's first crack at directing, and while it's a bit clunky and clichéd at times, the story is interesting and entertaining enough to warrant a watch. Crowe's acting is top-notch and tugs at the heartstrings — a timely tribute with the 100th anniversary coming up soon.

RUN ALL NIGHT

[MA15+]

7/10

THE GIST: Jimmy Conlon (Liam Neeson) is an ageing hitman who kills the son of his former friend and bad-ass boss (Ed Harris) to save the life of his own estranged son (Joel Kinnaman). The two friends quickly become foes and Jimmy has to go on a one-night rampage to protect his son.

ZOO SAYS: The amount of Taken rip-offs Neeson is doing lately is getting beyond a joke. This is just Taken, but instead of saving his wife and daughter, it's his son (who said Hollywood is out of fresh ideas!?). That said, this is one of the better copies, thanks to some tight action and the addition of Harris.

SHOOTER

BATTLEFIELD: HARDLINE

XB1, PS4, XB360, PS3, PC

THE GIST: The action-packed, multiplayer, first-person shooter has had a change of outfit, ditching gung-ho military men and introducing cops versus robbers. Police cars and getaway vehicles lend a hand for new kinds of multiplayer modes — like heists — to spice up the ol' run-n-gun formula.

ZOO SAYS: With hints of GTA 5, Need For Speed and that classic Battlefield feel, it sounds like cool mix but random match-ups can be a circus. If you can get two good teams who know the maps, avoid distractions and focus on the goal, you might get some cool action going. If not, you'll likely be grouped with a bunch of random kids who scatter and die a lot. Cast your eyes towards single player here, too — it's like a prime-time crime show, but not shit.

JRPG

FINAL FANTASY TYPE-0 HD

PS4, XB1

8/10

THE GIST: Your team of uniformed students from "Class Zero" have united to fight off militants who are invading the land. Each student has their own powers, giving the Power Rangers a run for their money.

ZOO SAYS: It's much cooler and faster-paced than the many previous Final Fantasy entries, with much better combat and less of those stupid little squeaky-voiced animals in your face all the time. Well worth your cash.

OK, who switched my shottie with a Super Soaker?

WOLFENSTEIN PREQUEL

🔔 Zoo's top shooter of 2014 is back with more Nazi-slaying adrenaline in this all-new prequel: Wolfenstein: The Old Blood. This first-person shooter takes place in 1946 where the Nazis are on the brink of winning World War II. As BJ Blazkowicz, you aid the Allies in a two-part mission in Bavaria. Part one is set in a prison ward of Castle Wolfenstein, while part two gets a bit Indiana Jones-like, with archaeology and artefacts that unleash dark, ancient powers.

BLADESTORM: NIGHTMARE

PS4, XBI, PS3, PC

THE GIST: In this revised version of a real-time tactics war game on PS3, your custom characters recruit, prepare and lead armies into battles. This time around you can create secondary characters, play in a secondary story mode called "nightmare", or try multiplayer. ZOO SAYS: It was a kinda cool unknown PS3 title, but not enough has been done to enhance the graphics or gameplay. A proper sequel would have been better.

INDIE ROCK

MODEST MOUSE

STRANGERS TO OURSELVES

8/10

SOUNDS LIKE: Six years on from their last album and the Mouse are still as verbose, modest and musically complex as ever.

ZOO SAYS: The fact that Isaac Brock can make Shit In Your Cut and God Is an Indian and You're an Asshole into gradually infectious rock songs says a lot about his talent.

DEATH/TECH METAL

PSYCROPTIC

SELF-TITLED

8/10

SOUNDS LIKE: Amazing acoustic and electric guitar passages (Cold is insanely good) go up against equally impressive drumming and abrasive hardcore/death vocals.

ZOO SAYS: The riffs on this Tassie foursome's sixth album are so sick you'll bang your head off its hinges.

ELECTRO ROCK

AWOLNATION

RUN

SOUNDS LIKE: The follow-up to the Californian four-piece's surprise hit debut from 2011, Megalithic Symphony, continues their random mix of styles. Led by chief songwriter and singer Aaron Bruno, rock, dance, ballads and industrial all get thrown into this musical soup to make a tasty blend.

ZOO SAYS: It's a bit schizo, and lacks structure at times, but the slow build-up of the title track and the bounce of Hollow Moon (Bad Wolf) works, as does the anthemic

I Am, which goes close to matching their most famous song, Sail. To his credit, Bruno hasn't sold out and keeps pushing musical boundaries instead of going for the easy cash grab.

7/10

INDIE ROCK

COURTNEY BARNETT

SOMETIMES I SIT AND THINK, AND SOMETIMES I JUST SIT

8/10

SOUNDS LIKE: The much-anticipated debut album from Melbourne-based Barnett is rife with the stream-of-consciousness rambling, clever rhymes and ability to capture everyday Aussie life that's made her a sensation both at home and overseas. The laidback delivery of her quirky observations over simple rock riffs only adds to the charm.

ZOO SAYS: Like a female Gareth Liddiard, Barnett's guitar licks and quintessentially Strayan storytelling seem effortless. She nails the inner-city descriptions of an office boy (Elevator Operator), organic veggies (Dead Fox) or the housing market (Depreston). Note: change "sit" to "shit" in the album title for hilarious results.

HEAD TRANSPLANTS

An Italian surgeon reckons he'll be performing head transplants by 2017. Is he off his nut?

1 Neurosurgeon Sergio Canavero says he's fixed the technical problems of head transplants, such as immune system rejection, and fusing the brain stem and spine, with the first to take place in 2017. He's already got patients, too

2 The first recorded head transplant — apart from Frankenstein's monster — was on a Russian dog in 1954, when a puppy's head and forelegs were fitted to a large dog. In several experiments, all dogs died within a week

3 In 1970, a monkey's head was replaced with another monkey's head in a US lab. As the spinal cords weren't attached, the beast was paralysed and lived nine days. In TV reports, the monkey would look around the room, smacking its lips

4 Canavero plans to cool the head so it can survive longer, cleanly cut the spine, glue the brain stem onto the new spinal cord, keep the patient in a coma while new connections grow, and have them walking within a year!

5 Dr Chad Gordon, part of the first US face transplant team, says we're a century away from it happening. He adds, "Neurosurgeons just don't know enough about the brain yet to even know what they need to connect"

6 If the technique is perfected, ZOO would like to see Kathy Griffin swap heads with Peter Griffin
